WOMEN FOLDING TENTS HIGH SCHOOL EXERCISES

Inmates of North Lee Street Resorts
Shaking City's Dust From Their Feet.

Tomorrow night at midnight will witness the final evacuation of the "red-light" district of Alexandria, which for more than fifty years has existed on Lee street in the northeastern portion of the city. Chief of Police Goods today notified all of the women living in the district that the houses must be closed tomorrow night in accordance with the order which was given by Mayor Thomas A. Fisher, more than a month ago.

The action was taken by Mayor Fisher at the suggestion of Judge Louis C. Barley of the Corporation Court who came to a conclusion that the houses must be closed following the passage of the Kenyon bill in Washington. Conditions had become so bad in Alexandria, due to the influx of male visitors from Washington to Alexandria's district, as to cause serious inconvenience to the passengers on the electric cars between the two cities.

Chief Goods stated today that he did not think that there would be any trouble in closing the houses. A number of the women have already left the city and others were busy packing their belongings today. Police will be stationed in the district tomorrow night to see that the orders are carried out.

Mrs. E. L. Robertson, secretary of the National Florence Crittenton Mission, who made a census of the inhabitants of the district at the request of Judge Barley, has offered to provide homes for any of the women who wish to accept her offer, but it is said that there will be very few who will do so.

Some houses in the segregated district in which nocturnal revels have been carried on almost as far back as the recollection of the oldest inhabitants have become as Tara's Hall, and others will within a few hours be tenantless.

During the past half a century such resorts have been segregated, the northeastern section of the city being Alexandria's White Chapel. Almost as soon as any questionable house was established elsewhere the authorities have pounced upon proprietress and inmates and they were kept moving until eventually they have taken up their abode in the tolerated district.

Long before the civil war this same neighborhood bore the stigma of the scarlet woman, and many of her votaries infested what was known as "Clay Hill," the extreme northeastern section of the city, and "Blackdog Alley," in the square bounded by Lee, Union, Duke and Prince streets.

The latter was cleansed many years ago, but when the civil war began an army of lewd men and women followed the soldiers to this city. They roosted in every section, some of which now form the residential neighborhoods, where the most disgraceful orgies were conducted. There were five brothels on Prince street, between Royal and Fairfax, and equally as many more on Prince street, between Lee and Union, and on Wolfe street, between Fairfax and Royal.

At that time more such resorts were in the western section than in any other portion of the city, especially on West street. Numbers were on King street also, while concert halls, free-and-easies, and similar places were situated in different places.

At the close of the war the work of eviction began, and in a few years the undesirables gradually took up their abode in the most undesirable quarter of the city, where they have remained until their nests have been disturbed by the orders of the court.
